Project Description

Love telling stories?

Fort Pulaski National Monument, located near Savannah, Georgia, is a national park with a rich cultural and environmental history that is yearning to be explored. From the American Civil War to hurricanes, saltwater marshes to lighthouse, the National Park Service interprets a wide variety of topics of great interest. In a world cluttered with information, we want to refine and expand our storytelling to make it more accessible to the varying interests of the digital visitor.

What to expect:

- Review Fort Pulaski's website for content. Suggest edits and topics to be included or expanded upon. You can give the visitor a voice!
- Research topics and events related to Fort Pulaski National Monument and write short stories that will be published on the park's website or turned into social media posts.
- Help develop a timeline for park staff and the social media team to create appropriate stories based on cultural and environmental ties to the monument.
- Show off your graphic design skills! Evaluate the park's publication offerings and create material that will be published and distributed to our visitors.

Additional Information

Fort Pulaski National Monument was established to interpret the history of Fort Pulaski, a nineteenth century masonry fortification built to defend Savannah, Georgia. The park explores a number of cultural topics ranging from slavery to the New Deal. The park was enlarged with the addition of over 5000 acres of saltwater marsh which makes up a large proportion of the local coastal ecosystem. The park has been adjusting its interpretation and education offerings to better balance the wide variety of topics available to the visiting public.
